FURTHER READING:

With the exception of the growth of long spines, this plant is almost identical to its relative plant 'Echinocactus grusonii'. Extremely resistant to drought and desert conditions, this plant thrives in the sun. If grown outside, it must be protected from frost as this can cause damage to the exterior of the plant. As the plant has well drained soil, it is able to withstand lower temperatures as cold temperatures in poorly drained soil is likely to damage the roots.
